The Cutting Edge: Understanding Non-Suicidal Self-Injury in Youth

Janis L. Whitlock; PhD is a research scientist in the Bronfenbrenner Center for Translational Research. She is also the founder and director of the Cornell research program on self-injury and recovery.

- Self-injury is intentionally hurting the body but without suicidal intent. Why would someone do this in a way that looks like a suicide attempt but insist it has nothing to do with suicide at all?
- Janis will cover self-injury basics, the workshop will also address effective detection, intervention approaches and best practices for early intervention
